Person 1: So, are you ready with this question?

Person 2: I think I'm!

Person 1: Okay, so what do you think? It's not as perfect as it seems.

Person 2: With a laugh, I think most of my crafts.

Person 1: Seriously! How could you say that?

Person 2: No, not only crafts, but whatever is done by hand would have some mistakes. For me, it's more when it comes to craft.

Person 1: But people present theirs very much perfect with their handmade crafts and everything.

Person 2: They are Focused, practiced and very much interested.

Person 1: Are you saying you are not focused and interested?

Person 2: No, not exactly, but I try different things. I don't stick with a single thing. I love to do different experiments in different art forms, so I make a lot of mistakes.

Person 1: Wow, agreeing with your flaws. That's great. Do people accept your flaws?

Person 2: Are you asking in crafting and art or asking personally? (laughing)

Person 1: No, don't mistake me. I'm asking for crafting and art.

Person 2: Just chill. I'm just joking. "Both in art and personal life, one should know how to hide flaws and scars with other things."

Person 1: That's a nice explanation. How do you hide your mistakes in arts and crafts then?

Person 2: By giving more decoration, very simple, and artist people know this trick.
Winking

Person 1: Really? Unfair! We thought it's a part of beauty, but you're saying it's hiding the mistake!

Person 2: No, not like that. Most of the time, it's for enhancing the beauty of the art and craft. But rarely, very rarely, we do it to hide the mistake and enhance the overall beauty.

Person 1: That is an acceptable answer, but why can't it be done without mistakes?

Person 2: See, even though handmade items have some mistakes, they have that uniqueness. Those flaws and imperfections make their beauty. A thousand things might be designed and done by machines with perfect precision, but things made by hand with imperfections are very special. Those talents are really unique.

Person 1: You're right.

Person 2: Not saying for myself, but how important crafting and art are, I'm speaking. "We are antique, not machinery."
